The Devil's Advocate Des Kato Equis

The concept of “Playing the Devil’s Advocate” goes back 2,000 years ago to the time of the Sanhedrin. In trying a capital case, if at the onset all members were in agreement to convict without knowing all the facts, the accused was acquitted. Only when some had doubts and then later voted to convict was the accused put to death. This prevented a rush to judge, without the opportunity of a fair trial. This same process, which is as relevant as ever, was used to examine conflicting perspectives between fundamentalist and liberal Christians who may have rushed to judge without knowing all the facts.
