Civil War: Army and Navy Journal and Gazette 1864-1865

832 pages of the "United States Army and Navy Journal and Gazette of the Regular and Volunteer Forces," archived on CD-ROM.

Sometimes called "Army and Navy Journal" or "Armed Forces Journal," these 52 issues date from August 27, 1864 to August 19, 1865. The Army and Navy Journal was the nation's leading military journal of the time.

In 1863, the Army and Navy Journal, as it came to be called, began a long run. It was not just a professional journal like the others mentioned. The Army and Navy Journal, along with its social and other items about service personnel, carried articles, correspondence, and news of interest to military people that helped bind its readers together in a common professional fraternity. The Army and Navy Journal and Gazette first date of issue was August 29, 1863.

In addition to major Civil War events, the Army Navy Journal covered stories of court martials, obituaries, official dispatches from the War Department, appointments, list of AWOLs, foreign military matters, editorials and advertisements.

The Journal included reprints of articles from Confederate publications. Southern newspapers including the Greensboro Journal, Richmond Dispatch, Richmond Enquirer, Richmond Sentinel and Atlanta Constitutionist.

The disc contains a text transcript of all recognizable text embedded into the graphic image of each page of each document, creating a searchable finding aid. Searches can be conducted across all issues on the disc.
