This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1833 edition. Excerpt: ...Would quickly run: for it breathes with art. CLXX. ON A STATUE OF CUPID BOUND. Both weep and sigh, squeezing together the tendons of your hands, O deceitful child. This befits you. There is no one who shall deliver you; do not look piteously; For you yourself, from the eyes of others have forced the tear, And having fixed bitter darts in their hearts, 5 Have distilled the venom of your inevitable arrows, O Cupid: but the woes of mortals are to you laughter. You have suffered what you have done. Justice is a good thing. CLXXI. ON CRATINUS. Wine now is a swift horse to the pleasing poet, But drink water, and you will produce nothing ingenious. This, O Bacchus, Cratinus said, and breathed, smelling not of one bottle, But of a whole cask. Accordingly his house was full of prize garlands, and he had His forehead, as you too have your's, yellowed with ivy. CLXXII. ON THE DEATH OF ABDERIO. Cursed be that day and that destructive darkness, And the terrible roar of the agitated sea, Which formerly overset the ship, upon which the very amiable Abderio prayed to the Gods ineffectually. For he was entirely destroyed, and was borne by the wave, 5 To the rough Seriphus, where By the hands of the respected public hosts of this country, having obtained the rite of fire, he reached his country Abdera, enclosed in a brazen urn. CLXXIII. EPITAPH ON XANTHIPPE. I will bear record, for it is not fit, that here, without a name, The illustrious wife of Archinautes should lie dead; Xanthippe, the offspring of Periander, who once Governed a nation, while he held the bulwark of the high-tow-ered Corinth. CLXXIV. A FLUENT POET. O King Apollo! of the streams of his verses The fountains resound loudly. A mouth of twelve springs! Ilissus is in his throat. What shall I..
