Over the past decades, mankind living on the earth constantly increases their demands for energy while facing the situation of increasingly exhausted non-renewable energy. When scientists call to mind that the sun possesses inexhaustible energy, they begin to dream that they could create a small sun on the earth to solve mankind's energy problems. Themed with this topic, the book adopts substantial and accurate historical records and combines his personal experience. With clear and penetrating language, he kindly and casually presents scientists' efforts in putting the sun into the bottle, nuclear weapon competitions between great nuclear powers, influences of various political forces, etc. Therefore, a great picture of science, humanity and politics opens.
