Most of what we know about Lincoln has been invented by Northern propagandists, many who were, and are, enemies of the South. In fact, nearly every one of the 16,000 books that have been penned about Lincoln are by non-Southern writers and published by Northern publishers. Can we honestly expect to get a true and unbiased picture of who Lincoln really was from such works?

This non-fiction book by Lochlainn Seabrook, author of the popular Nathan Bedford Forrest: Southern Hero, American Patriot, addresses this problem by looking at the sixteenth president from the South's point of view. For example, far from being the "Great Emancipator," as a lawyer Lincoln defended slave owners, helped create laws in Illinois that limited black civil rights, and throughout his entire life lobbied to have all blacks shipped out of the U.S. He was even a leader in the Illinois chapter of the American Colonization Society, an organization whose stated mission was to make America white from coast to coast.

During his time in office Lincoln also committed countless crimes, among them starting a war without congressional approval, subverting the Constitution, illegally suspending habeas corpus, shutting down over 300 Northern newspapers, imprisoning or deporting fellow Northerners who advocated peace, and rigging elections.

His Emancipation Proclamation too is not what is generally taught: actually a cynical political ploy, Lincoln himself called it, not a civil rights measure, but a "war measure." As Seabrook points out, Lincoln's proclamation did not even free any slaves, for he made it active only in the Southern Confederacy, by then a foreign nation where he had no legal authority.

These and many other fascinating facts are recounted here in a refreshing new take on America's most polarizing leader. You will never look at Lincoln the same way again. Foreword by best-selling author Clint Johnson (The Politically Incorrect Guide to the South).
