The theater was the most popular form of entertainment during the early 1900s, similarly thought of as movies today. The American theatre was still an evolutionary process from the 1880s to the early 1900s, Americans would experiment with multiple styles and forms of theatre. And just as we have our "Tabloid magazines" the theater had one magazine that captured the delicate process that encompassed it, "Theater Magazine". Frank Mott in A History of American Magazines calls Theatre Magazine "quite the most ambitious attempt in American theatrical history to present adequate representation of the stage in a periodical."

The writing is timeless and the pictures captivating. Researching this magazine became mesmerizing and I found myself reading and admiring what was such a glorious time in American history. I was surprised at how many actors and actresses I recognized or heard of and found myself wishing I could turn back time and see it all for myself. Alas, with that not being possible the next best thing is all right here, see for yourself or surprise someone with this wonderful gift
