Maggie's a dutiful diplomat in a collapsing African country, fending off hot flashes and longing for a joint. An evening of glad-handing at the July Fourth reception ends with a corpse under the acacia tree. Assigned to tie up the administrative details, Maggie learns the dead woman's work gave her access to many of the diplomatic community's embarrassing secrets. As she penetrates the dead nurse's coded medical records, Maggie still has her day job to do; rescuing an anthropologist held hostage by a serpent cult--Maggie hates snakes--saving kidnapped schoolgirls, and taking a spoiled congressional wife shopping. A surprise encounter with her old lover, on the lam since a fling with terrorism in the '70s, brings her closer to the truth behind the killing. Insurgents close in, trapping Maggie with the killer, and forcing each to chose between duty and desire.
