Five fantasy short stories about young women with magical abilities written by McCamy Taylor, revised and collected together for the first time. In "Cora Dreams of Me", brain damage gives a battered girl the ability to make pictures real---and save the life of her beloved sibling. But there is a price that must be paid. "600 Moons" is about a young mermaid living in captivity who has to choose between freedom and saving her owner's life. "Father Friday Cemetery" tells the story of an orphan who can see ghosts. While searching for her mother, she encounters a magician who may be able to lay to rest the spirits of the abandoned children who follow her. "Mourning Glory" is about a Neanderthal clone with psychic powers whose birth has a profound effect on the modern world and upon her birth mother. "Unmarked by the Malachim" tells the story a future world in which war is a thing of the past, thanks to the mysterious entities called the Malachim and the psychically gifted children they recruit--and about the one that got left behind and the girl who tries to save him.

These stories were written over the last two decades. Each has a young female hero who must overcome tremendous odds to save those who are dear to her. For adults and mature teens.
